The median age of the City population is estimated to have remained at 33.6 years in June 2018, while the median age for the New Zealand population is estimated to have fallen from 37.0 years in 2017 to 36.9 years in 2018. New Zealand's median age peaked at 37.6 years in 2013 but has been steadily falling since then. The significant decline in the number of people migrating overseas and the increase in the number of people arriving from overseas are contributing to the decline in the median age.

Manawatū-Whanganui Region

The Manawatū-Whanganui region population is estimated to have increased by 3,400 people between June 2017 and June 2018, an annual increase of 1.4%.

Natural population growth in the Manawatū-Whanganui region (the difference between births and deaths) was 900 people while migration contributed growth of an additional 2,600 people. Regions which experienced a weaker rate of population growth than the Manawatū-Whanganui region in the year to June 2018 were Southland, Hawkes Bay, Nelson, Gisborne and West Coast.
